Right to appear in Supreme Court: The right to hearing is that which resides in both the Sixth Amendment as well as the Fourteenth Amendment. A right to hearing entails that an individual maintains and be afforded the legal right to be heard in the venue of a court of law with adequate due process attached. In terms of the Sixth Amendment, individuals possess rights to a speedy as well as a public trial.

In relation to a speedy trial, such as in accordance with Supreme Court case Barker v. Wingo, there existed the following qualifications for determining if one's right to a speedy trial had been violated. These include the "length of delay," "reason for delay," "time and manner of rights," and "amount of prejudice by which delay may have occurred." Delays surpassing that of a year or more may be seen as a violation, while reasons may be comprised of the need for specific witnesses.
